Agronomy Tip Sheet

With the dry summer weather we have experienced, many people are facing hay and forage shortages for the winter. One option for fall forage is planting a winter annual such as oats. Oats planted in early fall can provide a great source of forage before winter. This can be grazed, chopped or made into baleage. Fall rain is key to making this work. The other key is fertility – feeding this fall crop will give you maximum production. You can also look to mix oats with triticale and annual ryegrass. This will give you a fall cutting of oats and a spring cutting of triticale and ryegrass. Speak to a CFC representative for tips on how to make this work on your farm.
