Agronomy Tip Sheet

As we head into November, corn and soybean harvest is in full swing. The last hay has been baled for the year and many of us are starting to feed for the winter as pasture growth has stopped for the season. Are you still grazing stockpiled grass or are you feeding hay wishing you still had grass? Now is a good time to evaluate your pasture performance and your hay production from the year and identify some ways to improve for next year.

Could you get more out of your pastures? What is holding you back? Is it overstocking? Are weeds robbing you of grass production? Could some well timed fertilizer applications help boost production? What about your hayfields? Did you produce enough hay for the winter? Taking a good look at where you are can help you make decisions for the future. Identifying the main issues holding you back on your operation can help you find ways to improve.

CFC can help you to find some answers. Whether it be weed control strategies or soil sample analysis to identify fertility issues. Our territory sales managers can work with you to find solutions that are within your budget to improve your bottom line.
