AGRONOMY TIP SHEET

February is a great time to improve pastures and hayfields by frost seeding clover. Clover can help to thicken thinning grass stands, improve protein content, and provide nitrogen for the grasses. Just like any other type of planting you need to make sure your fertility is in good shape to promote successful growth. You also want to make sure that your grass is grazed down or mowed to allow for the seed to reach the soil. Frost seeding is simply broadcasting seed onto the ground and allowing the freezing and thawing action from the warmer days and cold nights to work the seed into the ground. This creates seed to soil contact and allows for germination. The moisture and warming temperatures of late February and early March allows the young clover to grow.

Red clover, white clover, or ladino all work well for frost seeding. Red clover is shorter lived but will tolerate lower fertility better than white or ladino.

Seed red clover at 6-10 lbs/acre and white or ladino at 2-5 lbs. These low rates allow for a small atv spreader or tractor cyclone spreader to do the job. Make sure not to overgraze your pastures in early spring so that the young clover can establish itself. Come in to your CFC store or talk to your field representative for specific varieties of clover that will work best on your farm.
