Agronomy Tip Sheet

As we head into the heat of summer how are your pastures holding up? The dry weather has taken a toll on grass for pasture and hay production and many people are back to feeding hay to get through this tough time. With forage being short you may want to consider planting a summer annual for late summer grazing or hay.

Sudangrass is one option for grazing or hay. It loves the heat and just needs some moisture to get going. You can normally harvest sudan after 45 days and often get a second cutting or grazing after another 30 days. This can provide good forage before fall and does not have risk of prussic acid like some other species. Talk to your local CFC Territory Sales Manager or store for information on varieties that will work for your operation.
